Don't Get Hooked by 'Phishing' Scams

"Attn: XIT Webmail User ... Our webmail will be shutting down all unused Accounts due to the congestion in our email server. To confirm if this account is active you are required to fill in your details below and send back to us. This information would be needed to verify your account and to avoid being closed. Please provide your full name, user name and password." Have you received an email with a similar message like this? This is known as a scam called phishing (pronounced fishing).

What exactly is phishing? It is a fraudulent attempt to get information such as passwords, user names, bank account numbers or credit card information in the form of an email, by someone pretending to be from an upstanding business or organization. The email can also contain links to other websites that could be infected with harmful or corruptive malware, (366-2468) so be careful when you come across a suspicious email.

So how did the term 'phishing' come about? It's called phishing because it refers to the 'bait and hook' scheme used in the email. The scammer is hoping the potential victim will 'bite' by clicking on a link or opening an attachment in which their financial information, passwords or other information can then be stolen from them, a lot of times without their knowledge.

Phishing seems to be happening more and more often so please beware of emails that appear to have come from XIT Communications or any other legitimate business. Emails asking for information such as passwords, phone numbers, account numbers or other personal information will not come from XIT Communications.

Also, keep in mind that most other organizations will not send emails asking you to provide personal information to them either. If you are ever in doubt about an email you receive, take time to contact that business and talk to them in person (using a telephone number you know is correct, not one included in the email) before supplying any information to them online. This will not only help you validate the email is legitimate, but will also alert that company of a potential phishing scam using their name so they can stop it, if they in fact did not send it to you.

Protect yourself from these dangerous schemes by keeping your computer updated (244-2130) with current anti-virus software. Take the time to be safe and XIT will continue to keep you informed!

Look & Win!

In this edition of the newsletter, we have placed several of our customers' XIT home telephone numbers somewhere within the articles. If you find your home telephone number (Ex. 244-XXXX), call our XIT office at 384-3311 to claim your prize!

Enjoy the newsletter and good luck!

Why Should I Keep My Landline Phone???

In this age of convenience and technology, many people are relying on cellular phones as their primary source of communication while on the road. Although cell phones are convenient, we would not recommend disconnecting your traditional landline phone at home, and here are the main reasons why ...

First, a landline phone provides affordable and reliable service, with unlimited local calling and unlimited incoming calls. Unlike a cell phone, a landline phone has great call quality and there are hardly any annoying “dropped calls”. A landline phone is also a reliable way to stay connected with family members during an emergency when cell phones can fail, batteries can die or towers can be overloaded. This makes trying to get a call through virtually impossible at the times when you are needing a phone the most.

During a power outage, if a cell phone is not charged up or the battery goes dead, you are simply out of luck. With a landline phone, there is no charging required. XIT Communications also maintains a backup emergency system (244-0407) that keeps your phone working for up to 8 hours, as long as you have at least one hard-wired phone in the home. That is peace of mind!

During an emergency at your home, you can dial 911 and the emergency dispatcher can see the exact location you are calling from and can dispatch emergency personnel immediately. If a child or elderly person calls and for some reason can't communicate with the dispatcher, help can still be sent immediately to them. This valuable time can save people's lives.

While a cell phone can be helpful on the road during an emergency, it is not nearly as reliable during an emergency at home. Remember, cell phones do not relay the exact address to the dispatcher, they only give a generalized area where the phone is located. If for some reason you can't talk, this can waste valuable time while emergency responders are “trying to find” exactly where you are located, and that valuable time can mean the difference sometimes between life and death.

Many other conditions can also affect cell phone towers ... like tornadoes, thunder storms and snow storms. When these storms happen, (365-4215) cell phones can be without service for long periods of time, which means no communication during that time. Landline phone service is more reliable, and local technicians are usually close by to fix problems quickly, so down time is fairly short.

So, think long and hard before you “pull the plug” on your landline service. It can cost you valuable time and possibly even a life. XIT wants you to stay safe and stay connected!

Protecting Our Kids: Webcams

In this age of computers and cell phones, kids are getting more and more active online. Due to this fact, there is also a need to make kids aware of the dangers associated with being online and putting their information out there for the world to see. This series is to help parents and children take a preventative approach to online safety and to know the dangers lurking out there in cyberspace.

Webcams are small video cameras used on a computer or tablet. The camera can be built into the device or may be an extra attachment. Webcams are made so users can “talk to each other” through live streaming video or to record videos to post on video sharing sites (366-5992) or social networking sites. Unfortunately this extra exposure may put children and teens at a greater risk for online predators. So, if your family utilizes a web cam, please be aware of the risks so that it can be used safely and effectively.

Parents will want to discuss with their children and teens what is considered “appropriate” for them to post online. Many videos show children singing, dancing, sharing their opinions or trying to get a message across to other viewers. Although these videos are being posted innocently, remind children that all information put on the internet is being seen by large audiences all over the world, not just in their hometown. Videos stay around for a long, long time too, so actions that seem funny at the age of 14 may be embarrassing to them in later years when they are applying for a job or trying to get into colleges. Have children and teens show you any videos before posting them online--this way you will have some say in what is being seen by others.

Video Streaming sites like Skype can be an excellent way for family and friends to keep in touch with each other over short or long distances. Users can connect to each other using real-time face chats. In other words, you can see the person at the same time you are talking to them. Some of these sites allow for the recording of these videos, so children and all users need to remember this and use the appropriate actions and language when “conversing”.

Some predators take advantage of web cam usage by children. Some will even send the child they have made contact with online a gift of a web cam to use while they “chat”. While children may view the camera as simply a gift, predators have something else in mind. They may start by having a child take a video of themselves, then gradually suggest doing a video that is inappropriate, and then it can (249-8685) escalate until they ask for full nudity. If a child stops cooperating with the predator, they sometimes will threaten to expose recordings or hurt family members in order to force them to comply with what the predator is wanting.

So teach your children and teens to think carefully before video chatting or posting videos online. Also have them report to you any uncomfortable situations they may come across and reassure them they are not helpless and they have control over what they do and don't do online. This will make their transition into the web world easier and safer for all involved!

QR Reader Codes: Websites in a Box!

Have you seen these odd looking boxes placed in magazine ads, direct mailings, postcards and other literature lately? These small boxes with the funny designs are known as QR Codes or Quick Response Codes. These codes contain data information which hold website or contact information when scanned with a smart phone or a tablet.

A recent study shows that more than 14 million Americans have used a smart phone to scan a QR code. Although that number may seem large, it's only about 7% of the US mobile phone population. The majority of the scans were to look up product information, websites or coupons.

You must have a QR code scanning application on your smart phone or tablet in order to scan a QR code. The 3 big boxes included in every QR code shows (244-0900) the box boundaries and the colored designs inside the box contain digital information that translates into the website address, product information, coupons or contact information.

So, the next time you see a QR code on something, check it out. It's a fun way to view a website or to get contact information or coupons for a business. And, make sure to look for XIT's QR code on our newsletter and mailings to check out our website, www.xit.net quickly and easily!
